The girl appeared to have displeased her mistress, who gave her an unmerciful thrashing with a cane. The girl complained to the police. who saw from the marks on her that she has been recently cruelly treated, and a summons was issued. The girl said her father had sold her in Annam, and the defendant had bought her for $100. The woman had frequently beaten her, and she did not wish to live with her any onger. She had no friends or relations in China. The defendant was fined 310, or in default 14 days' imprisonment; and the girl was handed over to the police. She expressed a desire to go to the Tang Wah Hospital, where she had been to enquire into the death of George Goodram. while this case was proceeding.

> The Military Officials are so wrotchedly paid when amployed that they cannot borrow money if they wish to do so, when unemployed, and the consequence is that they are, as a rule, exceedingly miserable. If they were paid at the same rate as the civil officers of corresponding rank, a better class of men might be persuaded to serve in the army, in place of the poor dejected creatures now She Huang ti was the title of a most importaut personage whose name was Chang. He was born in the north-western part of China, about 260 years before Christ, and inherited the Kingdom of Tain from Chuang-ainng Wong, his reputed father, when only 13 years old. He was remarkably elever and energetic, and grew in wisdom and understanding, under the direction of Li Pn-wei, his probable father. His mother, who had formerly been the concubine of Li Puwei, was presented to Chaang siang Wong before he succeeded to the throne of Tsin, and whilst he was a sort of outcast, known as the Prince I-ohun, and actually retained as a hostage at the Court of Chan. Chong became powerful enough to continue the work commenced by his supposed grandfather, and soon abolished feudalism. and subdued the whole of the feudal states to his imperial rule. He travelled about from place: to place, ever restless and active. The Literati tried to oppose him, but he subdued them also, sent them by hundreds of thousands to build the Great Wall, and destroyed most of the classical works then known. He built an immense palsoe, called A.Fang Kang, near the modern city of Shienyang, some 50 li, west of Singan Fu. He divided the Empire thus formed into 36 Provinces, and was the first to assume the title Huang-ti, which means ruler of a hundred Kings, or King of Kings. Cheng thought he had established a dynasty that would last 10,000 years, but it passed away in the second generation: He was very superstitious, and hated the Confucianists so thoroughly that he had lots of them boiled down into fat, to feed a lamp kept burning perpetually in his sepulchre. Napoleon L tried to imitate She Huang-ti in many ways, and did not succeed in satablishing his Dynasty very securely. The present Emperor of Japan is said to have tried to imitate him, but I think it has only been so far as to overthrow the feudal power of the nobles, who caused so much trouble in provoking wars with foreign countries. What we want now is a modern She Huang-ti, who will break through the bonds of red tape that bind the present with the past, and let the future go free : cause every temple in the Empire to be turned into a school for the training of the young n modern arts and sciences; connect every town in the Empire by telegraph wires; join overy city by railread with its provincial capital, and every provincial capital with the great city, Peking: establish Military Academies in every province, and Naval Academies in every large seaport; substitute for the present tests at the examinations something more in accordance with the requirements of the age, and more in accordance with the duties likely to be porformed by the successful competitors, whether civil or military, such as the reading and answering of a dispatch on ordinary topics of government, simple arithmetical calculation, the hitting with a rifle-shot a target 18 inches in diameter 100 yards off, the saddling, mounting and riding of a horse in a given time, and other light and easy exercises. Other things ought to be performed by the aspirants to civil honours. Ordinary reading, writing, arithmetic, and reflections on a case on trial in some Court, etc., would doubtless answer much better than elegantly composed essays on the writings of the ancients. I have been told that there is a young lady in this city, the daughter of respectable parents, who was not wesned until she was confreen y old. She is now seventeen, and has been sold to married man as a second wife. I saw the lady; she is about 41 feet high, and nearly as broad around the shoulders as she is tall. Fat, pleasant, and tender looking, she is somewhat lady-like, with a good head of hair, well formed hands, fingernails over three inches long, and the smallest of feet, bound well up, so as to show they are no sham things. She eats nothing but plain food, mostly vegetarian, drinks nothing but water, and does not smoke opium or tobacco. She rises early, and sits up late, and is always at work sewing something useful. In other respects she is rather dall, being anable to distinguish the character man, from that of ox. RXTRACTS ODE TO A WALTZER.

What! the girl I adore by another embraced? What! the balm of her breath shall unother man taste? What I proceed in the dence by another man's kne What I panting recline on another than me?

Sir, she's yours; you have pressed from the grape its fine blue:

From the reached you've shaken the tremulens dow; What you have touched you may take. Protty waltzor, adien! Sin H. ENGLEPIELD. PRINCE NAPOLEON. The chief of the Bonaparte family is brave, valour; he is sugneious, but he behaves with curiously repeated indiscretion; he has opinions, but nobody can tell exactly what they are, for he is always following the addestiny by turning himsolf into the laughingstock of a light-witted people. At the outset of his career the Prince seemed to have a vory France in 1845, being then twenty-three years old, the Republicans, who wanted a figure-head for their faction, seized upon him and took son of the great man, while others who impression everywhere by his pleasant features and gracions bearing that M. Guizot took alarm and ordered him to was at that time in prison, and was regarded escapades at Sirasburg and Boulogne, as an impracticable Pretender; he was, moreover, of Wurtemberg's grandson, so that there was a pretty general inclination to use the younger Princo as the show-leader of a party which, including Republicans as well as Napoleonists, called itself Democratic. The Prince had only to wait for events, and he would have been well served; but even at this age he betrayed not only that impatience. of results which is excusable in young men, but that want of tact which seems to be an cated. He could not see that his prestige his way to thank Louis Philippe with an feelings towards King Jerome's son never amounted to fear. The cousins tried a fall or man got the worst of it once and for all. At. the outbreak of the Revolution he had hurried to Paris offering his services to the Republican Government, but soon finding that he lost ground by trying to push his way, while his astuter kinsman gained in public from giving the full allegiance that might have secured his consin's confidence. appears to have hoped at first that he might succeed Louis Napoleon in the Presidency of the Republic; when this prospect vanished be fell to doubting whether his cousin was the lawful dynastic successor of Napoleon I.; and, with his usual sense of the opportune, started the delicate question of birthright just at the moment when his cousin was about to become the all-powerful master of France. very private interview between the relatives disposed of the question of birthright, and Prince Napoleon left the Imperial, presence much chastened in spirit, though not corrected. It would have been well for him if he could have seen that at the restoration of the Empire he was bound to take one of two straightforward courses - oither to share in the misfortunes of the Republicans. whose destrines he had espoused, or else accepting the honours which his cousin was disposed to confer upon him, to become the most loyal servant of the new throne. Prince Napoleon allowed himself to be declared heir presumptive to the Crown, to be created a General, to receive the Palais Royal as a residence with a grant of £10,006 a year; entourage that he was heart and soul with the new order of things. In truth he had too much innate integrity to approve the shameless conduct of some of the men who had come to high estate at the Coun d'Etat. own strength and skill before be incurred they showed at the time of the Crimean war. As Prince Napoleon had developed unorthodox views about religion, he was asked to become the patron of free-thinkers and free-lances-men like Sainte-Beuve. Ernest Renan, Emile de Girardin, and Emile Ollivier. He did succeed in rallying these men, and for a time there were some very pleasant parties at the Palais Royal, the Prince discharging his duties of host in a way to make his guests feel that, however outspoken their opinions might be even on politics, they would not not be has allowed doubts to be thrown on be construed amiss in high quarters. This was just as it should be; but some unaccountable spirit of error continually urged Prince Napoleon to bring his name before the world in explosive ways and at the H. R. It was in con-His restlessness, however, prevented him sequence of the negotiations which then ensued that the resolution was laken of dismissing M. Rouher and summoning M Envile Offivier; and the Prince, as a public token of his complete restoration to Court favour, was appointed President of the Commission which was superintending the publication of Napoleon I.'s correspondence. Here again, however, he showed his astonshing variableness, for his first act after belping to form a Liberal Cabinet was to order that the Correspondence, of which the first fifteen volumes had been published without excisions, should for the future be edited so that all passages "which the Emperor himself would have liked to suppress" should be kept out of print. In other words, he decided to strip an important work of all its historical value-about the last thing that might have been expected of a man who had aspired to lead a coterie of free-thinkers. It must be noted that up to the end of the Empire Prince Napoleon continued to identify himself overtly with the Auti-Clerical party. One is surprised to read in the manifesto which has brought him to prison that he looks upon religion as "the great interest of civilised communities," for he never gave indications of any such belief but he failed to convince the Emperor's in the days when his high position lent weight to his utterances. If he was not a scoffer, he was certainly a sarcastic commentator on Church doctrines. The excommunication of his father-in-law, Victor Emmanuel, was a topic on which he was but he should have assured himself of his never tired of jesting; and in the smokingroom where he received his intimes be had their implacable animosity. This animosity hung up a copy of a Bull of excommunication, with a translation by the side of it rendered into very free verses by Theophile Gautier. The well-known piety of the Princess Clotilde often caused the Prince's tinguished himself in battle; but at the time guests to view the exhibition of this document with surprise, as being at least in doubtful taste. His latest exploit is of a who saw that if Prince Napoleon return from piece with the singular infatuation which war with glory he might become a powerful once made him write to M.
